The Healing Brush is a powerful tool that can be used to replace faulty or missing pixels and to smooth skin.[Organic and non-organic dysfunctions in the gut. II. Metachromatic leukodystrophy]. The author discusses the pathogenesis of 'neuromuscular amyotrophy' or 'summer's disease' in ten cases with unusually long survival. The differential diagnosis includes muscular dystrophy, neuro-ectodermic dystrophy, subacute motor neuron disease, bulbar palsy, motor neuron diseases in general and chronic inflammatory demyelinating polyneuropathy with conduction block. On the basis of clinical, laboratory and pathological data, the author emphasizes the important pathogenic role of an 'infiltrating macrophage complex'. The visceral hyperaemia in the context of 'gastrocortical tumour' could not be confirmed morphologically. In three cases, the onset was associated with the appearance of cutaneous leukocytoclastic vasculitis. The IgM type of paraproteinemia was not detectable. The macular subtype of Hurler's disease was confirmed at autopsy.Q: When I import a library of Android projects to Eclipse, how can I easily know which Android project to compile? I want to keep a copy of my entire Android project structure on my computer, and have it automatically created when I import a Android project from a repository (using an ant script, for example), but I have no idea how to determine the original project name from inside the imported project. I know it can be done by looking at the manifest, but that's a hack. Is there a nice way of doing this? For example, is there a way to read a resource and know it comes from project X? A: You can add a custom eclipse plugin that watches a directory for manifest changes, and then as the folder gets modified, it adds all the new projects to a list of available targets. The problem is that when there is a manifest change, the currently running project needs to be stopped, and for this to work, you need to do it in a way that stops the running project without crashing the application. I have a package called CustomProjectImport that has a class that wraps the project import: `package org.eclipse.android.core.internal; import org.eclipse.jdt.core.IJava`

Editor's Note: This is one of a series of stories gathered from across the state by the News Service of Northwest Florida & Southern Georgia, a collaboration of 17 newspapers, about the Gulf Region's "War on Drugs". High school seniors knew the Hernando Courtlandam Drainage District had $22 million in taxpayer money, earmarked for high-tech development and job training, sitting in a vault, but they were not ready to admit it. That changed on Aug. 1, when, at the same time students were singing "Happy Birthday" to each other, Drain District employees quietly notified the county's supervisors that the money had been stolen. The theft was one of several stings over the past several years that have led to arrests of dozens of people in Hernando, Pasco and Polk counties. Most of them were nabbed on drug charges. Three others were busted for grand theft. As the students munched on cupcakes and sang about what they thought were tax dollars going to water parks, the supervisors, including Hernando County Manager Mike Merrill, were stunned by the news. "I am shocked," Merrill said. "I'm going to have to deal with this." An investigation by the News Service of Northwest Florida & Southern Georgia, a collaboration of 17 newspapers, found that since 2006, the federal government has spent $30.4 million in grants – nearly $14 million of which has gone to Hernando County. It is the county's responsibility to determine how the money is spent, so it should be no surprise that county officials were in the dark about what the drain district was doing with the money, officials said. The drain district is an independent, nonprofit, public-private partnership created by the counties of Hernando, Pasco and Polk and was originally created to help fund the Hernando Courtlandam Wastewater Treatment Plant. The plant was completed in 2012, but the drain district has not been operational since then. No one from the drain district was at Monday's Aug. 1 meeting. Officials from the three counties and the cities of Zephyrhills and Hudson, and the three drain district representatives from Hernando, Pasco and Polk counties, were at the meeting. "We are all just in the process of trying to figure out
