hi sarah, depending on the confidentiality level you are working at you may or may not be able to have access to the raw data. in this case we have put together a demonstration application to show you what can be done using fingerprint data. it is based on google cardboard and you can view a short video on youtube here: https://youtu.be/tthjcdpz1n4 in the demonstration app you can see a fingerprint read from a mockup of a metal card. the scene is automatically cleared and reset as the card is rotated to provide access to the fingerprint reader. the data is processed as standard binary fingerprint data and can be visualised as a grid in a canvas. you can then click and drag to move around the data and zoom in to examine more detail. and after a short delay the data is in the form of a text string and can be copied and pasted into the application. to see a live version of this application you can go to: https://examples.developer.google.com/quickstart/fp/cardboard/android/ note that some of the information above may not be available depending on your application's data confidentiality restrictions. best regards, brad.wilson@norman.com norman technology solutions the value is not what most people are used to. most people are used to the current practice of using an fbi or nctc standard print format card with a transparent background and a grid on the card. when presented with the aqp open source fingerprint demo, people may have a hard time with the concept that you are not using this traditional format. here is what the demo looks like on a side by
